Mr. Tim Meyer

Dear Tim:

Let me thank you again for organizing another quality program for our Office of Training and Education officers. As in our previous trip to Armonk, they all came back impressed with the Advanced Technology Classroom. Hal Horowitz apparently did a splendid job of whetting their appetites. Because many of the people who made the trip to Bethesda have been classroom instructors, they found Vaughan Orgille's demonstration of the use of the technology in a sample instructional program particularly informative. I am told that he is an impressive trainer in his own right.

I have expressed OTE's interest in the possibility of working with IBM to bring this capability into our training environment. While we understand the constraints you have mentioned, be assured our interest in this is as keen as ever. At the very least, exposure to this approach to training will have an impact as we design our future classrooms.

Please relay our appreciation to Tom Taggart and the other officers who went out of their way to provide us this additional exposure to a remarkable use of technology. It is a sample of what makes IBM such an impressive organization.

Sincerely,

Director of
Training and Education
